Value: What Do You Bring?

What Would You Do?

Scenario Workbook with Video Guidance

These situations are designed to help you think about the value you bring to teams, classes, friendships, jobs, and family situations. The goal is to move beyond talent and think about reliability, effort, attitude, initiative, accountability, and the impact you have on others.

For each scenario:

1. Explain how you would actually handle the situation.
2. Review the recommended timestamp from the Value: What Do You Bring? Lab.
3. Decide whether the Lab changes, strengthens, or challenges your first response.
4. Think through what could happen next and choose the approach that makes the most sense.

Use the Lab as a decision tool.

Answer first. Then review the timestamp and decide whether the ideas in the Lab change, strengthen, or challenge your original response. The goal is to practice making thoughtful choices about the value you bring.

Value: What Do You Bring?

SCENARIO 1

The Group Project Nobody Wants to Carry

You are put into a group project with three classmates. One person is organized, one is creative, and one is a strong speaker. You are not sure what your role should be, and your first thought is to just wait until someone tells you what to do.

HOW WOULD YOU HANDLE THIS SITUATION?

What could you contribute that would make the group better instead of simply taking up a spot?

NEED SOME GUIDANCE FROM THE LAB?

Review 0:47–2:16 of Value: What Do You Bring?

Review the section about character, skills, energy, reliability, problem solving, and the question: “Do you make other people better?”

AFTER WATCHING

After watching, what strengths or responsibilities could you bring to this group?

WHAT COULD HAPPEN NEXT?

What could happen if you never identify what you contribute and always wait for others to lead?

WHAT DO YOU THINK IS THE BEST APPROACH?

What is one specific way you could add value to the group from the start?

Value: What Do You Bring?

One Spot Left on the Team

You and another student are competing for the final spot on a team, club leadership position, internship, or part-time job. You both have similar ability, so the decision may come down to more than talent.

HOW WOULD YOU HANDLE THIS SITUATION?

If you were making the decision, what would make one person more valuable than the other?

NEED SOME GUIDANCE FROM THE LAB?

Review 1:25–2:16 of Value: What Do You Bring?

Review the questions about what problem you solve, what gaps you fill, what responsibilities you can handle, and whether people can count on you.

AFTER WATCHING

What qualities beyond talent could separate you from someone with similar ability?

WHAT COULD HAPPEN NEXT?

What could happen if you rely only on talent and ignore reliability, effort, coachability, or teamwork?

WHAT DO YOU THINK IS THE BEST APPROACH?

What is one quality you could intentionally strengthen so people see more value in choosing you?

Value: What Do You Bring?

SCENARIO 3

Talented, but Hard to Count On

You are one of the most talented people in your group, but you are often late, forget things, and need repeated reminders. People still know you are good at what you do, but they are starting to get frustrated.

HOW WOULD YOU HANDLE THIS SITUATION?

How much does talent matter if people cannot consistently count on you?

NEED SOME GUIDANCE FROM THE LAB?

Review 2:28–4:00 and 9:29–10:11 of Value: What Do You Bring?

Review the difference between natural strengths and intentionally developed skills, then the sections on reliability, initiative, and being someone others can count on.

AFTER WATCHING

What part of your value can be developed even if it does not come naturally?

WHAT COULD HAPPEN NEXT?

How could being unreliable eventually affect opportunities, trust, or the way people view your talent?

WHAT DO YOU THINK IS THE BEST APPROACH?

What habit would make you more dependable starting this week?

Value: What Do You Bring?

SCENARIO 4

The Group Is Already Negative

You join a class, team, job, or friend group where people constantly complain about the teacher, coach, boss, assignments, practices, and each other. It is easy to join in because everyone else is doing it.

HOW WOULD YOU HANDLE THIS SITUATION?

How would you handle the group without acting fake or becoming part of the negativity?

NEED SOME GUIDANCE FROM THE LAB?

Review 4:03–5:55 of Value: What Do You Bring?

Review the section comparing behaviors that add value with negativity, excuses, complaining, gossip, rudeness, and selfishness.

AFTER WATCHING

What could you do that changes the energy without pretending everything is perfect?

WHAT COULD HAPPEN NEXT?

What happens to a group when complaining becomes the main thing people contribute?

WHAT DO YOU THINK IS THE BEST APPROACH?

What is a realistic way to bring more useful energy into the group?

Value: What Do You Bring?

SCENARIO 5

The Gossip Gets You Attention

You know a lot about what is happening in your social group, and people often come to you for the latest story. You notice that sharing information gets you attention, but it also creates drama and makes people less trusting.

HOW WOULD YOU HANDLE THIS SITUATION?

Would you keep being the person who always knows and shares what is going on? Why or why not?

NEED SOME GUIDANCE FROM THE LAB?

Review 4:42–5:55 of Value: What Do You Bring?

Review the section on gossip, rumors, rudeness, selfishness, and how those behaviors lower both personal and group value.

AFTER WATCHING

How can something that gets attention still lower your value in a group?

WHAT COULD HAPPEN NEXT?

What could happen to your relationships if people begin seeing you as someone who spreads information?

WHAT DO YOU THINK IS THE BEST APPROACH?

What could you contribute socially that builds trust instead of drama?

Value: What Do You Bring?

SCENARIO 6

Everybody Sees the Problem, but Nobody Fixes It

Your group keeps running into the same problem. Everyone complains about it, but nobody offers a solution or takes responsibility for changing anything. You have an idea that might help, but you are not sure anyone will listen.

HOW WOULD YOU HANDLE THIS SITUATION?

Would you speak up and offer the idea, wait for someone else, or do something different?

NEED SOME GUIDANCE FROM THE LAB?

Review 4:16–4:39 of Value: What Do You Bring?

Review the behaviors that add value: encouragement, support, reliability, offering solutions, including others, communication, accountability, and responsibility.

AFTER WATCHING

Why can offering a useful solution increase your value even if your idea is not perfect?

WHAT COULD HAPPEN NEXT?

What happens when a group has plenty of complaints but very few people willing to solve problems?

WHAT DO YOU THINK IS THE BEST APPROACH?

How could you offer your idea in a way that helps the group instead of sounding controlling?

SCENARIO 7

Nobody Asked You to Help at Home

You get home and notice the trash is full, dishes are in the sink, and something needs to be picked up. Nobody has asked you to do anything yet, and you know someone eventually will.

HOW WOULD YOU HANDLE THIS SITUATION?

Would you wait until you are asked, take care of something on your own, or leave it for someone else?

NEED SOME GUIDANCE FROM THE LAB?

Review 6:17–7:52 and 9:48–10:11 of Value: What Do You Bring?

Review the comparison of two very different days, then the section on initiative and doing useful things without being asked.

AFTER WATCHING

How does initiative at home connect to the type of person employers, teams, and other people value?

WHAT COULD HAPPEN NEXT?

What message do you send when people always have to remind you before you contribute?

WHAT DO YOU THINK IS THE BEST APPROACH?

What is one responsibility you could start handling without needing to be asked?

Value: What Do You Bring?

SCENARIO 8

One Bad Start Changes Your Whole Day

You oversleep, get irritated with your family, arrive late, and immediately decide the day is already terrible. You start complaining, scrolling, avoiding responsibilities, and reacting negatively to everyone around you.

HOW WOULD YOU HANDLE THIS SITUATION?

How would you stop one rough start from turning into an entire day that takes value away from you and everyone around you?

NEED SOME GUIDANCE FROM THE LAB?

Review 6:17–8:03 of Value: What Do You Bring?

Review the two-day comparison and how personal choices, time, energy, and the people around you can either build or lower your value.

AFTER WATCHING

Which parts of a bad day are still under your control once something has already gone wrong?

WHAT COULD HAPPEN NEXT?

What could happen if you regularly let one frustrating moment decide the rest of your day?

WHAT DO YOU THINK IS THE BEST APPROACH?

What is one reset you could use to change the direction of a bad day?

SCENARIO 9

You Have Strengths, but Organization Is Not One of Them

You are creative, social, and good at several things, but organization and time management are a struggle. You keep telling yourself, “That is just not who I am,” even though missed deadlines are starting to hurt you.

HOW WOULD YOU HANDLE THIS SITUATION?

Do you accept the weakness as part of your personality, or do you work on it? What would that look like?

NEED SOME GUIDANCE FROM THE LAB?

Review 8:12–9:27 of Value: What Do You Bring?

Review the strategy of identifying natural strengths while intentionally developing a skill that does not come naturally, including time management and organization.

AFTER WATCHING

How can improving one weak area increase the value of strengths you already have?

WHAT COULD HAPPEN NEXT?

What could happen if you keep using “I am just not organized” as the reason nothing changes?

WHAT DO YOU THINK IS THE BEST APPROACH?

What tool or routine could help you develop this skill over the next month?

Value: What Do You Bring?

SCENARIO 10

You Are Quiet in a New Group

You join a new team, class, club, or job and do not know many people. You are not the loudest person in the room, so you start wondering whether you have much to offer compared with people who seem naturally confident.

HOW WOULD YOU HANDLE THIS SITUATION?

What could you bring to the group even if you are not outgoing or immediately comfortable?

NEED SOME GUIDANCE FROM THE LAB?

Review 0:47–1:22 of Value: What Do You Bring?

Review the different forms of value, including character, skills, communication, problem solving, encouragement, talent, experience, humor, and energy.

AFTER WATCHING

Which forms of value do not require being the loudest or most noticeable person?

WHAT COULD HAPPEN NEXT?

What could you miss if you assume being quiet means you have less to contribute?

WHAT DO YOU THINK IS THE BEST APPROACH?

What is one strength you could intentionally bring into the group?

Value: What Do You Bring?

SCENARIO 11

The Leader Who Does Everything

You are leading a group and want everything done correctly, so you start making every decision yourself. The work gets finished, but other people stop contributing because they feel like there is no room for them.

HOW WOULD YOU HANDLE THIS SITUATION?

Are you still adding value if your leadership makes everyone else less involved?

NEED SOME GUIDANCE FROM THE LAB?

Review 2:07–2:25 and 4:16–4:39 of Value: What Do You Bring?

Review the idea that the strongest value makes other people and the team better, along with the behaviors of inclusion, leadership, communication, and accountability.

AFTER WATCHING

How is strong leadership different from controlling everything?

WHAT COULD HAPPEN NEXT?

What could happen to the group if one person becomes valuable while everyone else becomes less engaged?

WHAT DO YOU THINK IS THE BEST APPROACH?

How could you lead in a way that increases the value of the whole group?

Value: What Do You Bring?

SCENARIO 12

Your Friend Is Having a Rough Week

A friend has been quieter than usual and seems frustrated. You are busy and could easily tell yourself that someone else will check on them. You also know a simple message or conversation might matter.

HOW WOULD YOU HANDLE THIS SITUATION?

What would being a person others can count on look like in this situation?

NEED SOME GUIDANCE FROM THE LAB?

Review 9:29–9:45 of Value: What Do You Bring?

Review the section about being the person others can count on through attention, support, and presence.

AFTER WATCHING

Why can simple support and presence be a real form of value?

WHAT COULD HAPPEN NEXT?

What happens to relationships when people only show up when it is convenient for them?

WHAT DO YOU THINK IS THE BEST APPROACH?

What is one small action you could take to be more dependable for people you care about?

Value: What Do You Bring?

SCENARIO 13

At Work, You Only Do What You Are Told

You have a part-time job. You complete every task your manager gives you, but when you finish, you stand around until someone gives you another instruction. You think you are doing your job because nobody has complained.

HOW WOULD YOU HANDLE THIS SITUATION?

Is completing assigned work enough to make you highly valuable as an employee?

NEED SOME GUIDANCE FROM THE LAB?

Review 9:48–10:11 of Value: What Do You Bring?

Review the section on self-starters, initiative, noticing what needs to be done, and doing useful work without constant instructions.

AFTER WATCHING

What would initiative look like without overstepping your role?

WHAT COULD HAPPEN NEXT?

How might two employees be viewed differently if one always waits and the other responsibly looks for ways to help?

WHAT DO YOU THINK IS THE BEST APPROACH?

What could you do at work to demonstrate initiative while still respecting your manager?

Value: What Do You Bring?

SCENARIO 14

Your Crowd Is Changing Your Habits

You notice that when you are around one group, you are productive, active, and focused. Around another group, you waste time, complain more, avoid responsibilities, and usually feel worse afterward.

HOW WOULD YOU HANDLE THIS SITUATION?

How much should the way people affect your habits influence who you spend your time with?

NEED SOME GUIDANCE FROM THE LAB?

Review 7:48–8:03 and 10:23–10:54 of Value: What Do You Bring?

Review how your value is affected by how you spend your time, who you spend it with, and the personal choices you make each day.

AFTER WATCHING

What clues tell you that a group is helping you grow or pulling you backward?

WHAT COULD HAPPEN NEXT?

What could happen if you repeatedly choose environments that make your habits and decisions worse?

WHAT DO YOU THINK IS THE BEST APPROACH?

What boundary or choice could help you put yourself in better situations?

Value: What Do You Bring?

SCENARIO 15

What Can People Expect From You?

Think about the people who know you well: family, friends, classmates, teammates, teachers, coaches, or coworkers. Imagine they are asked what you consistently bring when you walk into a room or become part of a group.

HOW WOULD YOU HANDLE THIS SITUATION?

What would you honestly hope they say, and what do you think they would actually say today?

NEED SOME GUIDANCE FROM THE LAB?

Review 0:20–0:44 and 10:23–10:54 of Value: What Do You Bring?

Review the opening question about what people can expect from you and the closing challenge to own, use, and keep developing your value through your personal choices.

AFTER WATCHING

What is one strength you already bring and one area that still needs intentional development?

WHAT COULD HAPPEN NEXT?

If nothing changed for the next year, how would your current habits affect the value you bring to others?

WHAT DO YOU THINK IS THE BEST APPROACH?

What is one specific action you can start now to become more valuable to the people and groups around you?

Value: What Do You Bring?

Coach’s Follow-Up

Look back at your answers. Your responses can show you where you already add value and where a stronger habit, skill, or mindset could make you more dependable and useful to the people around you.

Which scenario made you think the most about how other people experience you?

What is one strength you already bring to groups, teams, classes, work, or family?

What is one behavior that may sometimes take value away from the people around you?

What is one skill you want to intentionally develop?
